NO CLEAR ANSWERS IN DRUNKEN DRIVING CASES

By BARTMORE GRUND

NAHA, OKINAWA.

Government leaders yesterday evening expressed deep concern that recent increase in the number of drunken driving cases has no clear causes. Okinawa prefecture's Local Police Report (LPR), published each year in early July, is thought to be the most important sign of security and safety in neighborhoods across Okinawa. The streets of Okinawa remain well secured by local police, but they are hardly getting any safer.

Naha City Police Chief Hamakawa Futoshi points to the past year as evidence. From January to June, arrest rates for drunken driving jumped 32 percent from the previous year. This sudden climb in incidents is very alarming, since the trend from 2011 to 2012 revealed an actual two percent decrease in drunken driving.

An inquiry at the Nago Alcohol Addiction* Recovery Center (NAARC), the island's only clinic helping alcoholics recover, shows no significant increase in the number of people seeking assistance in trying to beat their addictions. Dr. Ono Yoko reports that the past ten years has seen hardly any increase or decrease in the rate of reported cases of alcohol addiction. She points out also that the rate of success for those who enter the recovery program is about 60 percent.

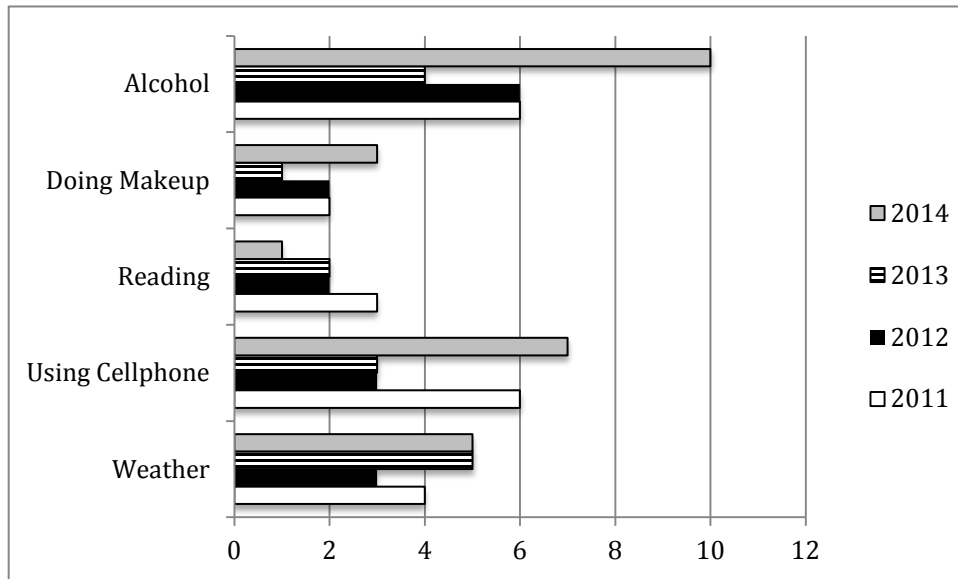

Where does this troubling trend leave us now? Government leaders admit that they are completely puzzled by the sudden increase, even as penalties for drunken driving have increased considerably. Due to excellent PR campaigns, citizens now understand even more how serious the problem is and how much they risk in punishments, and yet the arrests for drunken driving continue to climb.

*Addiction = 中毒
